East end of the Island, still under the command of Capt. Stephenson. After remaining at Galveston as above stated, affiant, and his company, were ordered to proceed to Aransas Bay,- They were taken on board of a prize ~~steamer~~ schooner which the Texans had captured from the Mexicans- This removal from Galveston to Aransas Bay was to enable this company to join other companies, with the view of proceeding to the Rio Grande, and driving the Mexicans out of Texas,- This company remained at, and near, Aransas Bay until the company was disbanded, finding that the Texans were not reinforcing them at the Bay, as they expected as the Texans had promised.- affiant thinks that this company was disbanded in the month of August, 1842- The company was disbanded by Capt. Stephenson, or Col. Clemens, with other companies in the Barren country near the Bay, near the residence of General Lamar, without giving affiant or any of the volunteers written discharges.

Affiant, while at Galveston, left his trunk, containing his clothing, he thinks with Col. A. A. M. Jackson, who he thinks had charge of the Custom-house, & has never received either trunk or clothing since- the trunk & clothing were worth at least fifty Dollars- affiant called at the custom-house for his trunk, but could not find it.

Col. Jere. Clemens, was Col. of the Regiment, embracing Capt. Stephenson's company. A. M. Thatcher was first Lieutenant of Capt. Stephenson's company- A. M. Martin was Adjutant of the Regiment.
