duty as a soldier. That he saw said A. P. Thompson during such duty both before and after said battle. That he did not see him during the battle, because this deponent was engaged leading his regiment in another part of the field; but he believes him to have been present, because the brave conduct of said Thompson in the said battle was a subject of general comment and notoriety among the soldiers of the said army, at that time. That said Thompson continued to serve with said army until regularly furloughed. — Sidney Shumlas
