I addressed Mr. Robinson from Havana, a communication, which I presume your Excy received, as I learned from Mr. Robinson that it was forwarded by him, with a narrative of my proceedings at Vera Cruz and Tuxpan up to the date of our sailing, which sailing took place on the night of the 8th of August last.

The illness which I mentioned in that letter was, as I then believed, a slight attack of yellow fever, though from its mildness I did not then suspect it to be such; and the debility which it left behind detained me longer in Havana than I had expected, owing to that cause, to the time which I at length had to wait for a passage, I remained there twenty seven days.

While in that city I addressed a note to Gen. Robt. B. Campbell the U.S. Consul for this Port, with the view of having it laid before Don Leopoldo O'Donnel the Captain General of the Island, a copy of which, marked Document A, accompanies this. Though put into the form of a request for instructions, it is apparent with Gen. Campbell I made an application for the admittance of our vessels into the Port of Tuxpan. The Consul had prepared a
