for vests which he thinks must have been worth Eight dollars a piece, for such he has been in the habit of buying from Sixty to Ninety dollars in the U. States - Upon the opinion commanding the Sale of the Goods given to him [illegible] of Mar. He thinks he saw some of the on the Quarter of Co. Stanwix. Deponent knows nothing of them to a certainty afterwards, but think they were either made use of or burnt up when they evacuated the place - Some clothing was made up for the troops which must have been of these goods as he knows of none furnished by the Government - and these or most have been made of the white above name - The Goods were so scattered that deponent cannot say what they were worth, but the amount was considerable Jamie de Lorent further saith that a day or two afterwards he saw some of the troops have two pieces or bolts of fine linen which he supposes to be part of the same stock of Goods, all of which deponent states he saw while stationed at Stanwix and further deponent saith not -
